

Clissold Park is set to host this year's spectacular fireworks display, which will have a 'movies' theme and be synchronised to music

SPECIAL EFFECTS

A SPECTACLE of colour and music is set to wow the borough in November with the return of the Hackney Fireworks display.

The family-friendly celebrations will be held in Clissold Park, Stoke Newington, on Saturday 4 November, following on from last year's sell-out success.

Mood lighting will give the park a magical atmosphere, while street-based performances will animate the pathways around the park. A children's funfair and food and drink stalls will also accompany the pyromusical display which features fireworks synchronised to music.

The theme for this year is 'The Movies' and residents are encouraged to dress up as their favourite characters, be it a minion, Elsa from 'Frozen', or Ron from 'Harry Potter'.

Tickets cost £7.50 for adults and £2.50 for children who live in Hackney; and £8.50 and £3.50 respectively for non-residents.

The Council is once again giving away 300 free tickets through two offers: one for residents and one for Hackney-based charities.

Tickets will be allocated on a first come, first served basis, simply select the 'free resident ticket' option. (Maximum of two tickets per person.)

Hackney-based registered charities are also invited to apply for 100 free tickets for their service users. E-mail: park.events@hackney.gov.uk with the name of the organisation, registered charity number, postcode, and subject 'concessionary tickets'.

Cllr Feryal Demirci, Cabinet

Member for Neighbourhoods, Transport and Parks, said: "Hackney's pyromusical fireworks display is one of the highlights in the borough's social calendar, bringing a magical atmosphere to Clissold Park as the winter nights set in."

Gates open at 5pm and the display starts at 7.30pm. It is 20 minutes long and suitable for all ages. Entertainment will be weather-dependant.

Questions answered

RESIDENTS had the opportunity to put their questions to Philip Glanville at the first ever Mayor of Hackney's Question Time.

More than 80 people attended the event at Hackney Town Hall on 2 October, which was chaired by long-term resident and former Guardian columnist, Dave Hill. Local people were invited to submit questions or ask them on the night, and the two-hour debate was streamed live on Facebook.

Some of the issues raised included crime and anti-social behaviour, building more affordable homes, parking, improvements to the Council's housing repairs service, and policies on mental health.

Jill Small asked about the financial, social and environmental benefits of the Britannia Leisure Centre redevelopment.

The Mayor responded that building homes for private sale was the only way to fund a much-needed new leisure centre and secondary school, as well as affordable homes on the site.

Patrick Mackervaise raised concerns about businesses running events in Hackney's parks, asking for assurances that the Council would ensure businesses pay the maximum amount for the hire of the borough's precious green spaces.

The Mayor responded that he supported the principle of renting out space for events, but that achieving a balance was important, as charging too much to hire the space might put the cost of

“I hope that events like this will encourage local people to take part in the important discussions we need”

events out of reach of residents.

The next morning the Mayor also answered questions submitted through Facebook and Twitter. He said: “I'd like to thank everyone who came along to the event, and everyone who sent a question via social media.

“When I became Mayor I made a commitment to be a visible and accessible Mayor and I hope that events like this will encourage local people to take part in the important discussions we need to have as a borough.

“It's important that we continue to have open and honest discussions, that the Council and residents can share their thoughts and ideas, and that we work together on solutions.

“Hopefully this new annual event will be a great forum for that, alongside our other engagement events and consultations.”

Irene's delight

Irene Sinclair celebrated her 109th birthday at a party in Hackney Town Hall, attended by Council dignitaries, friends and family

THE borough's oldest resident Irene Sinclair marked her 109th birthday at a jolly party in Hackney Town Hall.

She celebrated with family, friends and local dignitaries who all joined in singing 'Happy Birthday' to her. Irene was delighted with last month's event.

She said: "This is the first of four birthday parties this year, I just love parties!"

Irene was also happy to share some of her wisdom saying: "My secret to a long life is an open book, it's not a secret; eat freshly cooked food every day and walk where you need to go."

She also had some advice for young people in Hackney, saying: "My advice is that the older the generation, the wiser they are, you listen to them."

"I wouldn't say they don't make mistakes, but hardly. They have lived through hard times, and good times, you should listen to your elders."

"But mostly, love is all, I would advise young people to spread love around."

“ My secret to a long life is an open book, it's not a secret; eat freshly cooked food every day and walk ”

Love your neighbours."

Born in Guyana in 1908, Irene moved to London in 1957, before settling down in Hackney in the early 1970s.

It wasn't until Irene was 96 however, that she found stardom as a skin care model for the brand Dove, appearing on billboards in Times Square and working with top celebrity fashion photographer Rankin.

The Speaker of Hackney, Cllr Soraya Adejare, said: "It was a great privilege to welcome Irene to the Town Hall for her 109th birthday, she is an inspiration to all of us, and I'm glad we could help her celebrate this special day."

News in brief

Revamped lido: don't dive in yet

THE reopening of London Fields Lido has been delayed as work continues to repair and refurbish the facility.

The lido was shut in April for repairs after tiles started to crack and came away from the pool wall. The renovated 50m heated pool, with new indoor changing rooms, was due to reopen at the end of September.

The main repair work to replace the screed, render and tiles in the swimming pool has now been completed, but contractors still need to complete work to the pool and the outdoor areas.

Cllr Jon Burke, Cabinet Member for Energy, Sustainability and Community Services, said: "This further delay is incredibly frustrating, but I need the work to be completed to the highest possible standard and I am not prepared to accept anything less. I would like to apologise to everyone who was looking forward to using the pool."

"We will announce a revised reopening date as soon as the contractor confirms when the work will be completed."

The revamped London Fields Lido is near to reopening

Your views on St Mary's Lodge

PLANS to preserve and restore St Mary's Lodge, in Stoke Newington, are out for consultation.

The Lodge was built in 1843 by architect John Young.

It was one of the first houses along Lordship Road and represents the last era of rural life in Hackney when the village of Stoke Newington was surrounded by fields.

It remained a family home until 1959, when it was sold to London County Council and became a home for 'unmarried mothers'. The home closed in the mid-1990s and has been in a state of disrepair since a serious fire in 2005.

A Draft Planning Brief has put forward options for redevelopment of the site, which involves the restoration of the historic building, new community uses such as education, with potential for residential development to the rear of the property. Comments from residents and stakeholders will help inform the final version of the brief which is due to be adopted at the end of the year.

For more information and to take part in the consultation, before it closes on 6 November, visit: <https://consultation.hackney.gov.uk/planning-regulatory-services/st-marys-lodge-draft-planning-brief-for-consultation/>

MORE than 100 people involved in making Hackney Carnival its biggest and best yet came together for a lively awards event to celebrate their collective efforts.

The Mayor of Hackney, Philip Glanville and other councillors, were on hand to present awards at the event, held in Shoreditch Town Hall on 29 September.

Helen Yearwood from Pantonic Steel Orchestra, which won the Best Music on de Road award, said: "This event was the icing in the cake. Such a great end to Hackney Carnival."

"It's certainly felt that the Council was very proud of all the artists and talented people that represent our very special and unique community."

Other awards included carnival band of the year, which went to local group Tropical Isles.

The judge's choice for highly commended newcomers went to Carnival Elders & St Joseph's Hospice, whose wonderfully decorated double decker bus drew one of the biggest cheers from the crowds.

This year's Hackney Carnival on 10 September was a resounding success, with a record breaking 30,000 people coming out to enjoy the spectacular parade and supporting events in central Hackney and Dalston.

Regeneration plans take concrete steps

THE latest step in delivering nearly 1,000 new homes as part of the major regeneration of a Shoreditch housing estate was marked at the top of a 16th floor development looking out over London.

Mayor of Hackney, Philip Glanville, joined construction workers at the Colville Estate to lay the final piece of concrete in the 86-home tower, part of a Council scheme to build 925 homes, replacing ageing properties.

More than half of the new homes will be for Council social rent and shared ownership, paid for by selling some properties outright, in the absence of any Government funding.

Mayor Glanville said: "It was fantastic to celebrate this milestone in our work to build nearly 1,000 new homes on the Colville Estate, including hundreds of much-needed Council properties for social rent for local people.

"London is experiencing an unprecedented housing crisis, so I'm proud that we're responding to the challenge with a new generation of high-quality housebuilding."

Because you cared

Care workers with their awards at the ceremony, where the Council signed up to Unison's ethical care charter

CARE workers were celebrated at Hackney's first Care Worker Awards at a town hall ceremony on 28 September.

More than 200 care workers were nominated, by the very people they provide care for.

Cllr Jonathan McShane, Cabinet Member for Health, Social Care and Devolution, was the driving force behind the awards to raise the status and role of care workers.

He said: "It was amazing to see so much dedication and professionalism from care workers to make the borough a better place for all."

Introduced by Mayor of Hackney, Philip Glanville, there were two award categories: 'Housing With Care' – for workers

“It was amazing to see so much dedication, professionalism and caring from care workers”

directly employed by the Council; and 'Homecare' – for workers employed by agencies which have a contract with the Council to provide care services.

Sahar Gul, 50, who works at Morrel Court, a sheltered housing scheme in Haggerston, was the winner of the Housing with Care category.

He said: "I never thought about awards and was so surprised to be nominated. The work makes me happy because I have helped someone."

Angela Mitchell, 58, employed by Aquaflo Care agency, was the winner of the Homecare category. She was nominated by the family of Sidney Hodgson, 94, who passed away last month. She said: "I was really surprised and shocked but really happy. It was wonderful to be nominated and a lovely way to remember Sidney. He was a lovely man to work for."

The Council also signed up to Unison's ethical care charter at the ceremony, which abolishes quotas and focuses home care visits on what is in the best interest of the person being cared for and their care worker.

News in brief

EU all are welcome in Hackney

MAYOR of Hackney, Philip Glanville, has launched a #HackneyLovesYou campaign to ensure EU nationals in Hackney, who make up around 15 per cent of residents, feel welcome after last year's Brexit vote.

He said: "As a local authority we can't do much about Brexit, apart from collectively lobby the Government to lessen the impact on local services. "But what we can do is to tell our EU citizens that they will always be welcome here and that Hackney values all the positive things that they, collectively and individually, bring to the borough."

As part of the campaign, the Mayor would like to hear from residents about the contribution of EU nationals to Hackney life, be it a personal story or to celebrate a friend or neighbour.

Stories and images can be sent in via social media using the hashtag #HackneyLovesYou or by e-mailing:

mayor@hackney.gov.uk

Limited edition 'I Love Hackney' badges have also been made to celebrate the borough's EU citizens. These can be picked up at Hackney Town Hall, or can be requested by e-mailing the Mayor directly.

Some residents have already been sharing their stories including Violetta Gorczynska, who moved to Hackney with her family from Poland 10 years ago.

Since moving to Stamford Hill, Violetta and her family have taken part in many community events, including volunteering for the Olympics, taking part in the Run Hackney half marathon, and most recently going on an Open House London tour of the newly restored Hackney Town Hall.

Mayor of Hackney, Philip Glanville, launched the campaign #HackneyLovesYou with EU nationals from the borough

Violetta said: "We didn't know much about the borough except the little information we have found in a book titled '50 the worst places to live in UK' where Hackney was in first place! That was 10 years ago and since that time the name of Hackney has lifted higher, as has our love for this place. We have made many happy memories living here in Hackney, including volunteering for the Olympics and attending the opening ceremony as Hackney citizens."

"We look forward to making more happy memories with our neighbours, all thanks to living here, in Hackney."

Of all the outskirts of London', wrote Sir John Betjeman in 1979, 'the borough of Hackney is to me the most interesting and the least considered'.

Today, the poet laureate's secret is out, and nobody could call this borough 'least considered'. But how Hackney has changed is certainly 'most interesting', as proved by a new book charting its past 50 years.

'Hackney: portrait of a community 1967-2017' is being published to mark the 50th anniversary of the Hackney Society. Fifty chapters take readers on a chronological march through the borough's modern history.

In 1967, the borough was a very different place: 'the predominant change in the air at that time was the progressive elimination of the ageing Victorian housing stock', writes its editor Laurie Elks.

But the photographs in its pages are also testament to the borough's enduring character. Laurie explains: "This book is mostly about the changes that have taken place. But the borough's vitality depends on the new, younger generation arriving in Hackney having the same commitment to make it a better place as the generation which arrived in the 1970s."

hackneypeople

By Harriet Worsley

I CAME of age in the 1980s," says Patrick Vernon. Adding: "The era of Thatcherism, apartheid in South Africa, racism and riots on the streets. That influenced me in many, many ways, and it still does today."

It made him, in fact, a very busy man.

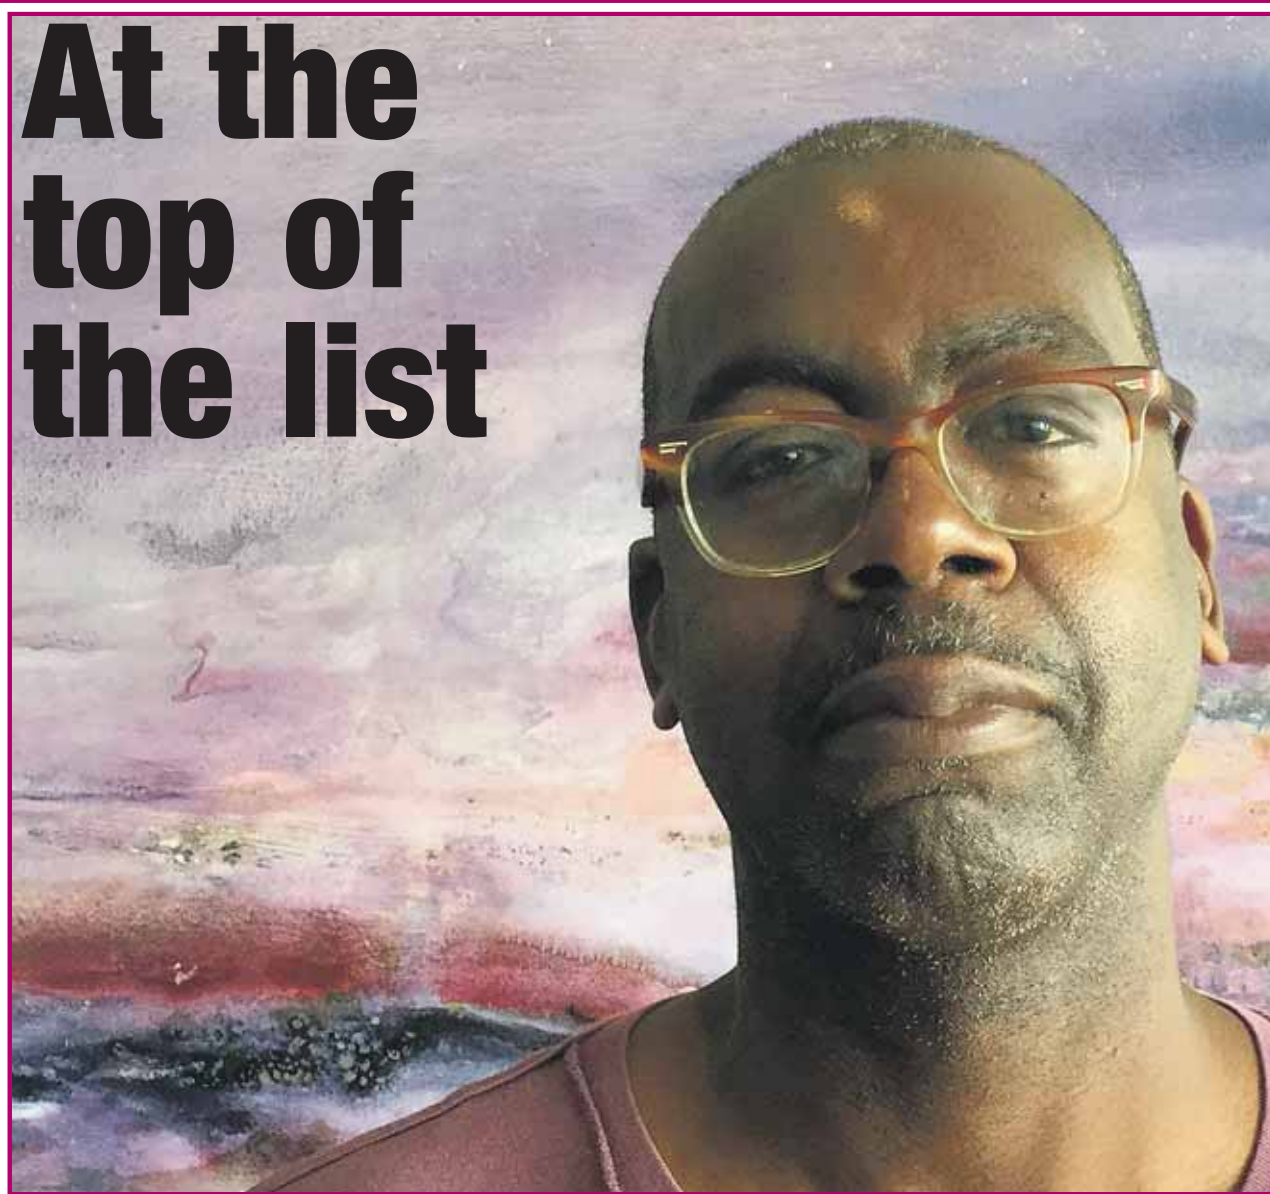

A leading social commentator and political activist, in no particular order, Vernon has also been: a ministerial advisor for mental health; member of the independent Metropolitan Police inquiry on mental health and policing; film maker; historian; Clore Fellow; founder of Every Generation and also the influential 100 Great Black Britons campaign.

Back in the 1980s, however, he was just a boy from Wolverhampton.

He says: "We lived in Enoch Powell's constituency, but as a kid you're not that aware of those things. Wolverhampton was this big, multicultural place, full of Sikhs, Hindus and a massive Caribbean community. Almost every black family came from the same area of Jamaica, around St James, so we were all linked and kids were raised by the village."

The village raised him well, and at 18 he was accepted into Manchester Metropolitan University to study law. It was when he came back home, for a postgraduate degree at Warwick University, that he first noticed something troubling.

At the top of the list

Patrick Vernon OBE, a resident and former Hackney councillor, is relaunching and refreshing his 100 Great Black Britons list this year

He says: "Lots of the young black men who were my peer group had developed mental health problems. I thought: what's happened in the time I've been away?"

Concerned, he started volunteering for the Wolverhampton mental health charity now known as ACCI (The African Caribbean Community Initiative). It was to affect the entire course of his career.

When, years later in 2012, he was awarded an OBE, it was for his work in tackling health inequalities and supporting black, Asian and minority ethnic communities.

Vernon never went on to practice the law that he studied.

Instead, he moved to London and forged a successful career in health and social care that included stints as a senior civil servant at the Department of Health, regional director for the charity MIND, and Chief Executive of the Afiya Trust.

During this time, he also served eight years as a Labour councillor in Hackney. He still lives in the borough today, and it was while mentoring local teens that he was struck by his next bit of inspiration.

“There were little or no resources that tackled issues of identity and black history, so I decided to make my own”

"I would talk to quite a lot of young black boys and realised that many of them didn't know much about their family history.

"There were little to no resources that tackled issues of identity and black history. So I decided to make my own," he says.

Every Generation Media, the website he created, is now one of the longest running black history sites in existence.

But the following year, when the BBC launched a huge campaign to find the 100 greatest Britons of all time, Vernon was to create something with even greater impact.

He explains: "People began to complain that the BBC's list had hardly any women, hardly any Welsh, very few Scots. But one of the worst aspects was that there was hardly anyone of ethnic minority background.

"Just Freddie Mercury, who qualified because he was born in Zanzibar.

"So I decided to make a list of my own, to make the point that there's been a black presence in Britain since Roman times, and that the community's contribution has been significant."

100 Great Black Britons captured the public's imagination immediately. Within 24 hours of the website's launch, it was inundated with so many views that it crashed.

Every major national newspaper covered it.

He says: "I realised that it was the first time the British public had been made aware of just how many black achievers there were in our country."

The list's impact endured long after it was announced that Mary Seacole had been awarded its top spot.

"Her portrait was acquired by the National Portrait Gallery. There was a successful campaign to erect a statue in her honour, more blue plaques went up to commemorate black people, the list was included in the National Curriculum," he says.

And today, Vernon is busy organising a new 100 Great Black Britons list. Voting will begin this month, to coincide with Black History Month.

"Now seems the right time," he says. Adding: "Research has uncovered more black people who influenced history, and recent times have produced new people to be proud of, such as Mo Farah."

There's more however. He says: "After the Brexit vote and the rise in hate crime, it just looks like there's new work to be done, to remind people we are a proud, multi-ethnic nation."

Perhaps maybe Vernon himself should be on that list?

SEPTEMBER is traditionally known as the harvest month, when armfuls of crops are ready to pick, gobble and pickle.

And across Hackney people were doing just that during The Urban Harvest, a day designed to celebrate the food grown in the capital.

Community gardens across London threw open their doors on 16 September to showcase their crops. On Mare Street, Cordwainers Garden hosted its annual vegetable show.

Kate Poland, Cordwainers co-director, said: "It's great to get people together to celebrate the community and what we can grow in small urban spaces, from giant pumpkins to dandelion paté, the garden and The Urban Harvest are a place and time to really appreciate these precious green spaces."

The Castle Climbing Centre in Stoke Newington held tours of its garden, where children also took part in nature and craft activities. Food and drinks made from garden produce were served, including herbal teas, garden cordials and smoothies.

Across the borough, a former disused car park on Shrubland Road showed off and sold the fresh produce it has been growing since its transformation into a community garden.

Maintained by residents, the site includes large raised beds, some reserved especially for children.

All the food grown is either used in a community kitchen or shared between residents of the street.

"Tomatoes are ripe for picking, courgette plants are overflowing from their beds and peas can be eaten fresh from the pod," explained Maddie Guerlain of Capital Growth, the organisation behind the festival.

"September is the peak harvest season and a perfect time to discover what's growing in the city.

"It's a great way to get outside, meet your neighbours and learn more about the amazing ways to grow food in urban areas."

News in brief

Food waste in the spotlight

THIS November, residents will be able to enjoy a free three-course meal at a top restaurant and learn how to cook healthy cheap meals as part of a new London-wide campaign.

'Small Change, Big Difference' will help people eat more things that are good for the environment and their bodies, stop wasting money by throwing good food away, and turn what they can't eat into electricity or compost by recycling it.

On 1 November, more than 100 lucky diners will get to enjoy a free three-course meal at London Fields restaurant Winger and Mangle.

The meal will highlight the scale of food waste by using ingredients that the average household throws away.

A series of six free workshops at community food kitchen Made in Hackney will show people how to cook cheap healthy meals that are good for the environment as well as their wallets.

Participants will learn how to make complete meals with a starter, main course, side dish and desert (and they get to eat it after or take it home for later).

For those who cannot attend the events, advertising at Hackney Central station and a new website will have tips on how to eat more healthily and sustainably and reduce the amount of food people throw away.

CLlr Feryal Demirci, Cabinet Member for Neighbourhoods, Transport and Parks, said: "These events will show people how simple ideas and small changes can reduce the environmental impact of the food we eat, as well as save us money and make us healthier."

Project uncovers habitats in Daubeney Fields

DAUBENEY Fields is set to receive £50,000 in order to help local children discover the nature on their doorstep.

Called Access to Nature, the new project is the brainchild of EcoACTIVE.

Thanks to money from the Heritage Lottery Fund, the charity will be rolling out free, fortnightly weekend events, designed for community groups, schools and volunteers to learn about the animals, plants and habitats within Daubeney Fields.

Esther Falgate, Access to Nature's project co-ordinator, said: "We are thrilled to have received support thanks to National Lottery players and are confident the project will support the local community to be active park users who take pride in their park and the wildlife it contains."

The first event took place on 16 September, when residents took part in a scavenger hunt, got up close to some worms and watched a live artist display. EcoACTIVE is now looking for volunteers interested in getting involved in the project.

Jonny Woo's Un-Royal Variety Show

3-4 Nov, Hackney Empire, 291 Mare St, E8 1EJ

GRAB the glitter, shove on your stilettos and get ready to party like a princess. Jonny Woo's Un-Royal Variety show is back, and it is bigger than ever.

Never one to be upstaged – or, indeed, out-queened – Jonny is hosting his gala at the Hackney Empire across two nights and a whole fortnight ahead of the Windsors' official performance at the London Palladium. His guests look a much more colourful bunch too. There's US drag-punk sensation Christeene; award-winning operatic comic Jayde Adams; and Lucy McCormick, whose cabaret take on the story of Christianity took Edinburgh by storm.

Expect the hottest talents in cabaret, dance, queer performance art and fringe theatre. Not forgetting, of course, The Kate Middleton Choir, led by the musical director of 'Jerry Springer: The Opera'. A tasteful tribute, we are sure.

Jonny Woo's Un-Royal Variety comes to the Hackney Empire on 3 and 4 November. Tickets cost from £10-£35. Recommended for those over the age of 18.

Newington
Music Festival!

WHAT other music festival allows you to listen to live folk, or even opera, while having your hair trimmed? It can only be the annual Stoke Newington Music Festival.

This year, the festival on a mission to support local live music is being headlined by legendary country singer Hank Wangford, along with multi-award-winning jazz guitarist Phil Robson. Much-loved poet John Hegley will also perform, indie fans can rock out to Stoke Newington staples The Cesarians, while reggae lovers will relish a performance from singer Janet Kay who, in 1979, became the first black female reggae artist to feature in the UK charts with 'Silly Games'.

From 20 to 22 October, bars, cafes, coffee shops and, yes, Beaucatcher the hairdressers, will all be acting as venues, raising money for the sexual health and wellbeing charity Brook. The two main festival sites, however, are Mascara Bar and St Paul's Church West Hackney. Hackney Today has two festival tickets to give away, allowing winners free entry to both venues for the whole weekend.

Festival goers are asked to donate £5 to Brook. For more information, visit: https://stokenewingtonmusicfestival.com/

Hackney Today is giving away a pair of tickets to the Stoke Newington Music Festival on 20-22 October, but hurry, the closing date is 17 October. Send your entry to: Stoke Newington Music Festival competition, Hackney Today, Communications, Hackney Town Hall, E8 1EA; or e-mail: htnews@hackney.gov.uk by 12noon on 17 October. Submissions must include an address, e-mail and contact number. Winners will be pulled out of a hat.

Light After Dark

Until 29 Oct, 2 & 4 Homerton High St, London E9 6JQ

HAS their ever been a better named initiative than the National Trust's current 'Prejudice and Pride' season? Fifty years after the partial decriminalisation of homosexuality, the idea is to explore the LGBT+ stories that have shaped the Trust's properties. And so to Sutton House in Hackney, where a new exhibition 'Light After Dark' is piecing together the history of London's queer club scene through film, fashion, art, writing and debate.

Organised by the pop-surrealist artist Kate Hudson, the show explores lost venues, highlights those currently threatened with closure and peers into the future of queer nightlife in London.

This is, after all, an exhibition that doesn't shy away from the big questions: from gender and gentrification to sex and subcultures.

PREVIEW*Sports Through A Lens /
The Great Sports Debate 2*2 Nov, Hackney Town Hall, E8 1EA

SPORT is on the agenda as the Council hosts an exhibition, public debate and sports photography project as part of Black History Season.

Young people have been learning about sports photo journalism with iconic snapper Ernest Simons, one of only a few black photojournalists. Ernest will display some of his most notable photographs in an exhibition alongside works produced by young people taking part in the project. The exhibition 'Sport Through A Lens' will be on display at Hackney Central library from November and Dalston CLR James Library from January.

As well as an exhibition there will also be a public debate on sport and the role it plays in the lives of black people. The free event is taking place at Hackney Town Hall on 2 November from 6pm to 9.30pm. Panellists include Olympic Taekwondo silver medallist, Lutalo Muhammed (pictured above) and sports broadcaster Darren Lewis. ## Live and direct

UP and coming local artists performed to a global audience for the first Hackney Live Lounge.

With support from a professional production crew and musical direction by Rising Tide studios in Mare Street, the young singers, MCs, poets and musicians produced an hour of live music streamed via social media platforms.

The 29 September event was the result of a week of activities for 16 to 19-year-olds that included a masterclass by Mercury nominated TY and a social media session run

“I would encourage all young, up-and-coming artists to take part in this, I have learnt so much”

by Urban MBA.

It was watched by online audiences across the world, including Germany and America. Viewers could ask questions and interact with performers.

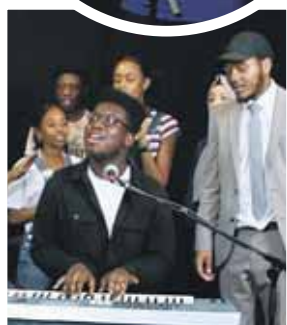

Rio Cavelle, 17, said: “I would encourage all young artists to take part in this, I have learnt so much.”

Hackney Live Lounge is funded by the Council as part of the Discover Young Hackney youth arts festival. Additional support was provided by Hackney Music Service and Hackney Empire.

Work of volunteers recognised

VOLUNTEERS with the Council's youth service Young Hackney were recognised for their hard work at a ceremony on 21 September.

They joined council staff and young people to watch live music, speeches and performances, with presentations from Hackney Youth Parliament, Hackney Sports Ambassadors and Youth Go Global.

Deputy Mayor, Cllr Anntoinette Bramble, said: “The night presented a much deserved opportunity for us to acknowledge our current volunteers and all their efforts towards the development of our young residents.”

Young Hackney volunteers take part in a range of projects aimed at young people aged six to 19. For more info, e-mail: xanthippi.karkantou@hackney.gov.uk; or call: 020 8356 3962.

Get a taste of life in the theatre

TWO leading theatres have collaborated to develop creative workshops exclusively for young people. Hackney Empire has teamed up with the Royal Court to develop two new courses, designed for young people aged 11 to 19. Run by the Empire's creative learning department, the courses are designed for schools, colleges and youth clubs. They aim to offer young people a taste of the professional world of theatre, as well as unlocking their own creativity.

The 'Writers Room: Taster Workshop' encourages students to develop a questioning writing style. 'Achieve Your Greatness', meanwhile, uses music to explore 'the five Cs: creativity, confidence, collaboration, communication and critical thinking'.

Ashley's advice is champion

ASPIRING judo champions met a real life master when Team GB Olympian Ashley McKenzie paid a visit.

Over 50 youngsters took part in the interactive session at Hackney Judo Club to promote a Yellow Belt Challenge that engages and supports disadvantaged and disabled young people.

“ADHD threatened to wreck my life until I discovered judo,” said McKenzie, explaining why he supports the initiative, which is run by The Fighting Chance Project.

With funding from Sports England's 'Sportivate' programme, it also gives young people financial help to cover the costs of judo suits and entering grade exams.

“All students are fully integrated into the club,” said its coach Calvin Walker Hall. Adding: “They travel to compete locally and nationally, winning national titles and gaining lots of experience along the way.”

Supporting older people

It is hoped that trained volunteers will improve both the physical and emotional health of the person they are partnered with

HACKNEY has been chosen to pilot a radical scheme, which aims to reduce isolation among the elderly and the burden on ambulance services.

The scheme, run jointly by London Ambulance Service and the Royal Voluntary Service (RVS), is calling on residents to give a few hours of their time each week, to provide support to older people in their neighbourhood.

By accompanying them for short walks, or helping with some gentle exercise, it is hoped that volunteers will improve both the physical and emotional health of the person they are partnered with.

In turn, the scheme could lower the number of calls made to the ambulance service by elderly people in distress.

Dr Allison Smith, head of strategy and development for RVS, explained: "It is estimated that one in three people over the age of 65, and one in two over 80, will fall every year.

"We believe that targeted support provided by highly trained volunteers can make a significant difference in the wellbeing of older adults, reducing the chance of them falling and easing pressure on the London Ambulance Service."

London Ambulance Service will itself refer older people to the scheme if they have suffered from frequent falls or loneliness.

RVS is now seeking Hackney volunteers with

“ Targeted support by highly trained volunteers can make a significant difference in the wellbeing of older adults ”

whom to match them.

These volunteers will be expected to commit to the project for a minimum of six months and will receive two full days of training.

Helen Ko, Active Ageing Project Coordinator for RVS, said: "This is a very exciting project and we are keen to meet with potential volunteers who want to take an active role in supporting our ageing communities.

"No prior experience is necessary. We embrace diversity and are seeking volunteers from different backgrounds and cultures. All we ask for is a commitment to help older people stay independent and active in their home and community lives."

News in brief

Sickle cell mentoring scheme

CHILDREN and young adults with sickle cell disease will soon be able to sign up for a programme offering them their own dedicated mentor. Launched by the Sickle Cell Society, the scheme aims to make free advice readily available to Hackney residents living with the condition. Those aged between 10 and 24 will be given one-to-one sessions with mentors who, crucially, have sickle cell disease themselves.

Affecting over 12,500 people in England, sickle cell disease is the UK's most common serious inherited condition. It is estimated that about one in 10 people with an African or Caribbean family background is a carrier. The initiative aims to make it as easy as possible for them to access support, with mentoring sessions taking place across the borough, at venues including the Sickle Cell & Thalassaemia Centre on Queensbridge Road, Homerton hospital and other social hubs. To book a mentoring session, e-mail: mentors@sicklecellsociety.org; or call: 020 8961 7795.

Support system for youngsters

A GROUP of young people have created their own online support system, to help others growing up with a disability in Hackney.

Over the past six months, young people have met at the Hackney Ark centre for children with special needs. The team, who have disabilities ranging from cerebral palsy to spinal cord injury, spent the first few months learning more about their diagnoses and getting to know others with physical disabilities.

In recent months, they have been focusing their efforts on helping others. With support from Hackney Ark, they have developed a Wiki page to share their knowledge and expertise with other young disabled people. The page was launched on 28 September. To find out more, visit: www.rixwiki.org/hackney/home/get-wikid-clone/

Drop-in and get help with hearing aids

AN estimated 26,000 people living in and around the borough suffer from some degree of hearing loss.

A new service aims to make their lives easier.

National charity Action on Hearing Loss is offering a free drop-in service called Hear to Help. Designed to support those who have to maintain hearing aids, the service employs knowledgeable volunteers to help replace tubes and batteries, as well as provide information.

Crystal Rolfe, Head of

South East Services for Action on Hearing Loss, said: "One in six people in City and Hackney are living with hearing loss and the free drop-ins have proven to be invaluable to the community."

The service is available to all those who live in the City and Hackney area and wear Barts Health NHS Trust hearing aids.

For more information, e-mail: heartohelp.cityandhackney@hearingloss.org.uk; or call Sharon James on: 07442 538 944.

THE National Secular Society is celebrating its 150th anniversary and paying homage to its founder – Charles Bradlaugh – who grew up in Hackney.

He was born on 26 September, 1833 at 5 Bacchus Walk, Hoxton. The son of a solicitors clerk, the family would move around the borough during his childhood, residing in Bacchus Walk, Bird Cage Walk, Elizabeth Street and at 13 Warner Place.

There was little initially to mark him out as a radical free thinker. He attended St. Peter's Church, Hackney Road, where he became a Sunday school teacher under Reverend Graham Packer.

However, his life would change when he expressed doubts about religion. Packer condemned him to his parents and he was thrown out of the family home, aged 15.

Young Charles was taken in by Eliza Sharples Carlile, widow of radical freethinker, Richard Carlile. In the late 1840s, Eliza ran a coffee house for freethinkers in Hackney at 1 Warner Place, off Hackney Road.

It was from here, that Bradlaugh would publish his first pamphlet 'A Few Words on the Christian Creed', aged just 17.

In spite of the break with his family, Bradlaugh maintained fond childhood memories of fishing with his father on the River Lea, a pursuit which he kept up for the rest of his life.

By the time he was elected Liberal MP for Northampton in 1880, he had served in the Army in Ireland, become a key figure in a number of reformist movements and been prosecuted for republishing a US pamphlet providing advice on birth control.

he founded the National Secular Society in 1866, to promote secularism and the separation of church and state.

And it was his battle to enter Parliament after being elected, which would define his public life.

As as an atheist and republican, he was faced with the dilemma of whether to take an oath which involved swearing allegiance to God and the Queen. Despite this, he sought to make an affirmation but the House refused, effectively barring him. Four times in the early 1880s he was re-elected; four times he tried to give the oath but was refused.

On one occasion, he was incarcerated for a night in the prison room in the Clock Tower, the only MP to endure this punishment.

It was not until 1886 that the issue was resolved.

In the House he also spoke on behalf of the plight of the Bryant and May match girls in the East End and was passionate about Irish Home rule and the cause of Indians in India.

Charles Bradlaugh died on 30 January 1890. His funeral at Brookwood Cemetery was attended by 3,000 mourners including a young Mahatma Gandhi.

Today, Bacchus Walk no longer exists, but his birthplace is marked by a brown plaque among housing to the east of Regan Way.

Recipes straight from the ovens at Waterhouse www.waterhouserestaurant.co.uk

THIS is the latest in a series of regular recipes courtesy of Waterhouse – a social enterprise restaurant alongside the Regent’s Canal in Shoreditch. This dish was created by Kieran Morgan, Blue Marble chef at Waterhouse. Kieran has been working at the restaurant for six months and he enjoys creating new recipes for customers and friends. His recipes are the Wednesday special at the restaurant.

Kieran’s lemon chicken Serves 2 as a main

Preparation time 30 mins Cooking time 20 mins

Ingredients

- 2 chicken breast fillets
- Juice of 1 lemon
- Tablespoon of peri peri seasoning (or your own mix of black pepper, basil, oregano, thyme, coriander, chilli powder and paprika)
- A big handful of curly kale leaves
- 2 cloves garlic
- Pinch of dried chilli flakes
- 1 tablespoon olive oil.

For the lemon sauce

- ½ red onion, diced
- ½ red bell pepper, diced
- 2 tomatoes, seeds removed and diced
- 80ml white wine
- Juice of 1-2 lemons
- 1 tablespoon butter
- 1 teaspoon fresh thyme leaves
- 1 teaspoon oregano
- Pinch of black pepper; pinch of salt.

Serving suggestion Enjoy with white or wholemeal basmati rice.

Method

- Cut the chicken breast in to strips, approximately index finger size. In a bowl, mix the juice of 1 lemon with the peri-peri spice mix. Marinade for around an hour
- Pre-heat oven to 200°C (220°C fan oven) If serving with rice, put it on to cook now
- Finely dice the red bell pepper, red onion and tomatoes. Add to a pan with the remaining lemon juice (use 2 or more lemons for a strong flavour). Sauté over a medium heat for 3 mins
- Add the white wine and cook for another 5 mins. Add the butter, green herbs and black pepper and stir through until the sauce thickens, then set aside
- Discard the marinating liquid and place the

- chicken strips in a grill pan to sear the outside, then place on a baking tray and glaze with 2 tablespoons of the white wine sauce
- Cook in the oven for 5-10 mins or until cooked through (test with a meat thermometer or by cutting into one strip to check for pinkness)
- Put a sauté pan on a high heat and add 1 tablespoon of olive oil. Add the kale, garlic and chilli flakes. Toss the kale to combine the flavours until colour starts to change (2-3 mins)
- Add a tablespoon of water and put the lid on the pan to steam the kale for 1 min. Toss through a pinch of salt and pepper to serve
- Plate the chicken, rice and kale and pour the rest of the sauce over the chicken.

Waterhouse - through Blue Marble Training - supports young people across the borough towards careers in the restaurant industry. Owned by Shoreditch Trust, income from this enterprise goes back into training programmes across the borough. Waterhouse in Orsman Road, N1, is open Mon to Fri, 9am - 3pm. Consultation on changes to the Council Tax Reduction Scheme

PROPOSALS to change the Council Tax Reduction Scheme (CTRS) for residents on low incomes are currently being consulted on.

The scheme costs around £25.5million a year to deliver. However, it no longer aligns with other means-tested benefits, and has become less beneficial for working households in comparison to non-working households.

The cost of the scheme is also predicted to rise by half a million pounds in 2018/19, with further increases expected in 2019/20. This comes at a time when the Council faces significant financial and budgetary pressures due to cuts in Government funding.

Under the current scheme, residents can get up to 100 per cent of Council Tax paid through the CTRS if they are a pensioner, or up to 85 per cent if they are a working age household.

The Council is now inviting feedback on proposals which include increasing the minimum contribution of all working age CTRS claimants from 15 to 20 per cent of their total Council Tax as of 1 April next year.

The consultation will close on 6 November. To take part, visit: hackney.gov.uk/ctrs

To speak to someone about the consultation, or to request a paper copy, e-mail: benefits@hackney.gov.uk; or call: 020 8356 3399.

Take part in sugar survey to win some sweet prizes

RESIDENTS are being asked to share their sugar habits in a survey.

The results will be used to help shape a campaign to warn people about the health risks of eating too much sugar and to find ways of reducing the amount of sugary foods and drinks that are sold and consumed in the borough.

Everyone who completes the survey by 30

October will have the chance to win a selection of prizes including tickets to this year’s pantomime at Hackney Empire.

To take part in the survey, visit: hackney.gov.uk/sugarsmart

The Mayor and councillors

Councillors are elected by residents and serve for four years. The last borough-wide elections took place in May 2014. Councillors have a range of responsibilities, including helping to oversee Council services.

They hold advice surgeries where residents can meet their local representative and ask them to take up issues of concern. Generally they can help with Council related matters, but if the issue is the responsibility of another person or organisation, councillors can often point people in the right direction and tell residents who they need to see.

Hackney has 57 councillors representing areas called wards – see map below.

MAYOR PHILIP GLANVILLE

Hackney's executive Mayor Philip Glanville was directly elected by the borough in 2016. He is the political leader of the Council, overseeing the budget and all Council services. The Mayor holds monthly casework surgeries in the Town Hall. To book an appointment, e-mail: mayor@hackney.gov.uk; or call: 020 8356 3269. Residents are first encouraged to contact their ward councillor. Civic and ceremonial duties are undertaken by the Speaker of Hackney, who is chosen annually from the borough's 57 councillors. The current Speaker is Cllr Soraya Adejare.
